ROBO-SLEAZE HEARD AROUND THE COUNTRY

John McCain and Sarah Palin are running “one of the most appalling campaigns” in American history.

Voters across the country are receiving incendiary “robocalls” — phone calls where a machine delivers a message over and over — connecting Barack to terrorism, infanticide, and other ridiculous accusations.

Recipients of the attacks are calling them “hateful,” “vicious,” and “desperate.” Time Magazine’s Joe Klein called out McCain specifically for these in-the-sewer tactics writing, “Real men don’t hide behind robocalls. It is nowhere near honorable.”

In 2000, McCain himself even denounced this kind of tactics — referring to them as “hate calls.”

These vile attacks are all that the McCain campaign and their allies have left: “In a way, we should not be surprised that Mr. McCain has stooped so low, since the debate showed once again that he has little else to talk about.”

In the past, these “robocalls” have flown under the radar. The McCain campaign expects them to go largely unnoticed by the mainstream press. We need your help dragging these ugly tactics into the light and making sure undecided voters aren’t stopped by this sleaze.

Fight back with our newest smear-fighting tool. If you receive an offensive “robocall” or a mailing that uses this kind of false, negative attacks, please share it with our campaign. Upload photos or an audio recording at:
